Biography

Therese Hungerford-Morgan grew up in New Zealand as one of nine children, going on to study midwifery at Massey University, Wellington, before graduating in 2010. She moved to Melbourne in 2013 and currently works in the birthing suite of a tertiary women's hospital. She attended the World Congress of Families in 2014 where she met Family Voice Victoria Director Peter Stevens and shortly after became involved with Voice for Change – a young adult's group of Family Voice. In 2018, she joined the Family Voice branch committee. Therese has been part of the team working on several pro-life projects over the years and has a particular interest in upholding the sacredness of life in the womb.
